DOCUMENTATION & DEBUGGING

A four-day seminar for working programmers and programming managers, designed to review current practice and suggest standards for effective operations. Two and one-half days and one evening session are spent on documentation. This section covers problems, methods, standards, formal systems, and needs of differing installations. A visit to a Washington area installation is included, as well as a workshop session in which student programs are processed by automatic documentation systems. The day and a half on debugging covers planning and estimating debugging time, methods, types of errors, standards, and effects of the program environment. Tuition, including luncheon and course materials is $220 for the first student and $195 for others from the same organization.
